Prices Rise Slightly, Only to Sag Again.

Railroads and Smelters Lead in Small Advance.

NEW YORK, March 6 .- Closing-The stock market came logically to a high close. Slight setbacks in the early part of the day were wiped out and the entire list stands from a stout fraction to two points higher than the opening. Confidence in a better market is driving out the political bogy, and the shorts are this afternoon showing ill concealed with eight out of every ten brokers on the bear side, and with every item of news exaggerated to undue proportions to affect prices adversely, the rise of yesterday and today can hardly be taken as the beginning of a tull market. Yet the strength shown by the railroads, coppers, and industrials is phenomenal under the circumstances. Judged by all professional standards, the market ought to be going down, for that is the object of visible manipulation, but in fact it is going up and exhibiting strength which surprises every-With eight out of every ten brokers hibiting strength which surprises every-

NEW YORK, March 6 .- The New York market opened very irregular, within a narrow range of the closing figures of last night. The more active stocks were about 1/2 to 1/2 higher, while some of the less active issues opened

As was the case yesterday, operation on the floor were by professionals, and it was nearly an hour before matters settled down to the routine of the day, when the inherent strength of the situation, which cropped out in the strong rise of yesterday, sent prices up again The rise on the railroads, smelters, and ome of the industrials amounted to

Around the noon hour the selling on short account and the better trading of the day had spent itself and prices began to sag, several of the more activ stocks receding to about the quotations at the opening. A good part of the morning the oldest traders were con-fused over the situation, not knowing norshing the observed on the situation, not knowing which way the cat might jump. It has come to be the habit of Wall Street to lay every unfavorable situation to political troubles, and for brokers to lash themselves into fury in denouncing the President and Washington Government. Today, however, there was an utter absence of unfavorable political news, and the market behaved in just the same old way. The real difficulty is that the public is not in the market, except in a small way, buying up cheap stocks and salting them away for a big rise some time in the future. This limits the amount of stocks available for manipulation by the traders, and at the same puts them to the necessity of inventing some sort of a new diversion every day to make business. and at the same pure short of a new sity of inventing some sort of a new diversion every day to make business. This leaves the market to move within farrow limits, gives prices from day to day a whip-saw record, and spreads gloom over Wall Street.

In a later and the day and are strong. One of the most prominent Broadway houses advised its correspondent in Washington at noon that it was wise to keep off the short side of the market. The letter said that with seven-eighths of the brokers on the short side, the market not only refused to go down, but was actually going up in the face of a concerted bear movement. This left only one course to pursue, which was to keep out or go to the long side. This view of the market is from a notably conservative source, and the operations of the past few days bears it out.

Senor Beistegui's friends expressed their profound sorrow at his death.

Sentember 14, 1880. His father, Senor Don Meguil de Beistegui, was a citizen of prominence in Mexico. At an early age he visited relatives in Brussels, Belgium, where he lived until 1994, when he was appointed an attache to the Mexican legation at London. He served there until September, 1997, when he was appointed to his position in the Mexican embassy in Washington.

Although he had been in this city but a few morths, he had gained considerable prominence socially. Senor Beistegui was a master of three languages, speaking French, English, and Spanish with equal fluency. He was an ardent student of art, and, although he never painted, he was regarded as a thorough and competent critic.

His parents are both dead. He is survived by one brother, Senor Don Juan de Reistegui, who is the Mexican minister to Chile. He is distantly related to the Mexican minister to Spain.

Relations of Labor and Capital Discussed With Executive.

After conferences with the President egarding the general relations between ade and capital, and specifically with reference to certain amendments to the Sherman anti-trust act, Seth Low, of New York, president of the National City Federation, left for home this evening. Mr. Low headed a labor commit-tee from the federation of which President Gompers, of the American Feder-ation of Labor; Prof. James Gore, of George Washington University, James O'Connell, president of the International Association of Machinists, are the resident members.

ternational Association of Machinists, are the resident members.

President Gompers declined to disclose the nature of the conferences this morning. Mr. Low and Mr. Gompers were closeted together for an hour just before the former left for New York. At a last meeting of the Civic Federation it was recommended that the Sherman act be amended so as to exclude public service corporations from its provisions and to allow reasonable trade agreements between competing individuals and firms subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. Low's visit is said to have been to present these resolutions, the President having signified to a former committee of the Civic Federation his will-lingness to consider them.
